Supporting Positive Behaviors in Children Birth to Five A Multi-System Tiers of Support Approach

Why use a tiered approach?

- It helps adults create the structure that children need to learn to regulate and respond appropriately to challenges.
- A tiered approach supports strategies for all children, groups of children and individual children's needs.
- A multi-system tier of supports should be available in every classroom and every home.
- A strong tier one is critical for creating a strong foundation to support children to manage their feelings and behavior.
- It is important that ALL individuals that work with young children are familiar with the supports used at each level.

If you work with young children, come develop your skills at all three levels.
